Mr. Lewis Kraft testified that he knew nothing of the death. Tommy Owens' boy had come to him early, in the morning and told him that some one was dead at Kelly's. He found it was his house-keeper. He knew nothing of her.

Col. O'Brien: "I am asked by one of the jury to inquire of you whether at any time you have seen any clothes burning?"

"Yes; I saw a fire burning in the back vard this morning, and thought it was Handlan's house—"

"I will tell you what that was," interrupted Dr. Kelley. "She had been purging upon an old comfort, and this her mother suggested we should burn, which we did."

Dr. John Frissell sworn:
I was called to the house, I forget what evening, but it was two or three evenings ago. My son told me I was wanted at Dr. Kelley's. I made no inquiries at the time, but waited at my office for my son, and he not coming I went on down. Louis Kraft recalled: "Haven't thought of anything in addition to what I have already sworn to. I saw deceased the last time night before last. She was going toward the street cars. There was apparently nothing wrong. I was astonished when I learned of her death this morning. I don't remember of expressing my astonishment to any one. Saw a bundle of clothes on the fire. It was about that high. [Indicating with his hands a height of from eighteen inches to two feet.] There was a fork standing by, which had evidently been used in shaking them up."

Dr. L. D. Wilson, who acted as principal physician in the autopsy, testified that death did not result from diarrhos.

Ool. O'Brien—There is on the street a rumor going the rounds this afternoon, that there had been a nabortion or recent pregnancy and that the foetus had been removed. I then took the proper steps for the holding of the inquest, and named three o'clock as the time. When I called Dr. Kelly expressed great indignation at the invasion of his house, and more at the idea of an inquest. I told him, however, that it would be better for all concerned to do so, and he finally acquiesced. No one out there made any direct charge; but there was a general suspicion that there was something wrong. Taking all these things into consideration, I ordered the inquest.

Dr. Kelly was shortly after found at his office. The Doctor said to the reporters, three in number, when they entered: "You are the very men I wanted to see." He then went on, and in a very coherent and consistent manner told the same story that he told the Coroner's jury, which will be found below, only this narration was a little more circumstantial, showing the girl's habits, her disposition, her residence with him, his treatment of her, her relations to him, etc.; and after he had concluded, he summoned Mrs. Anderson, the mother of the girl, who told us her story, which was a story, which was a superstantially as follows: may have been a week or more ago. Dr. Kelly stated that he would spend as much money as any other man in Wheeling to discover the origin of the crime, and just then Capt. B. B. After a consultation with the Prosecuting Attorney the justice told Dr. Kelly that there was no charge against him, and that he was free to go. Mr. Jordan told him, however, that the matter would be brought before the Grand Jury at the next term, and the Doctor expressed himself as perfectly willing to stand all investigation necessary in the matter. Dr. Kelly said that it was usual in such cases to show evidence sufficient for such a course, and during the progress of the trial he had been utterly unable to detect the elighteet grounds for an autopay. As for himself, he was perfectly willing that it should be done, and his objection arose altogether from the repuguance of the mother. 'Squire Bulger interposed his authority and said the autopsy must proceed, there, if possible, elsewhere if not. Finally a young lady led the weeping mother from the room, and the body was taken in charge by Drs. Wilson, Frisell, st., Frisell, jr., Hoge, Stifel and Hardesty. At half-past seven o'clock the jury again came together at 'Squire Bulger's office. There was quite a large crowd of people and the case was evidently arousing much interest in the city.
